

ChocoMe continues its row of successes at Great Taste Awards

Hungarian chocolate manufactory chocoMe has earned its second set of international awards in a matter of a few weeks. Having triumphed at the Academy of Chocolate Awards, the creator of amazing chocolate dreams has now collected no less than five bronze medals at the world's most prestigious tasting competition, the Great Taste Awards.

The global competition, open for a wide number of product categories, is well known for its jury of 400 connoisseurs with exquisite taste and unquestionable opinion, who have been mesmerised by the magical compositions of chocoMe for six years running. The panel includes chefs from world renowned Michelin star restaurants, recognised gastronomers, purchasing directors of prime department stores (Harrods, Fortnum&Mason, Selfridges, Harvey Nichols or Whole Food Markets) and well-known food critics who spend several thousand hours blind tasting product samples that are distributed unpackaged and unlabelled.

This year's chocoMe awards were also a testimony to the diverse flavours available from the innovative Hungarian brand. The panel were just as spellbound by the savoury, peppery dark chocolate treats as by the heavenly dragées made with dark and milk chocolate. Representing the former is Délice, a family of products based on a proprietary blend of chocolate introduced last year; three out of its four available flavour combinations were awarded a bronze medal at the competition.

With these five new awards, chocoMe now has no less than sixty-two international professional accolades under its belt. This means even more recognition for the brand, and even tastier desserts for the customers.
